

Project and Program Governance

Governance is about delivering projects and programs under a structured decision making framework to promote confidence and predictability in the delivery of quality outcomes. Without a clear governance framework, a project or program will rapidly exhibit signs of scope creep, budget overruns and quality issues.

The need for good Governance

Good governance is all about increasing the success rates. It establishes a decision making framework that is logical, robust and repeatable, and provides a clear chain of accountability and communication.

Effective of governance plays a critical role in the overall success of projects and programs.

Good governance saves projects.

The Adept Way

The first step in the Adept process is to review the situation and establish a a baseline that incorporates the scope, schedule and financial constraints of the project. From here, a project plan is created that defines how change, communication and risk will be managed.

Change Management: All project changes are assessed according to their potential impact on the baseline. The project plan outlines the process for proposing, documenting and executing change.

Accountability and Risk Management: The project plan establishes the chain of accountability, along with an initial risk analysis and the process for ongoing risk identification and management.

Progress tracking: Progress is tracked against the baseline, keeping it front and center to ensure that the final delivery is in line with the budget, schedule and scope of the project.

Adept consultants have backgrounds across finance, health, software, manufacture and defence, bringing the industry-specific knowledge to make sure your project has the highest chance of success.

Project Assurance

The goal of Adept Project Assurance is to increase the repeatability, confidence and predictability of a successful outcome. Project Assurance keeps everything on track through ongoing support including:

- Reviewing adherence to best practice methodology
- “Asking the tough questions” of project managers
- Confirming the application and effectiveness of the governance framework
- Providing ongoing risk assessment and management
- Ensuring the effectiveness of internal and external communications
- Providing professional support and guidance

We work as true partners to help your team achieve successful outcomes.